WILL LAUNCH ‘ROHINGYA GO BACK’, SAYS UNION MIN ON ‘MARWARI GO BACK’ CAMPAIGN IN TELANGANA

Calling the ‘Marwari Go Back, Gujarati Go Back’ campaign launched on the social media allegedly by Goreti Ramesh a drama being played by the Bharat Rashtra Samithi (BRS), Congress and All India Majlis-E-Ittehadul Muslimeen (AIMIM) in the guise of Communists; Union minister of state for home affairs Bandi Sanjay claimed that such campaign was happening because Gujaratis follow ‘sanatana dharma’ and are known to be close to the saffron party.

Declaring that Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) will wage a ‘Rohingya Go Back’ movement, he demanded that those running the movement against the Marwaris, to also talk about the Rohingyas whom have settled in the Old City in large numbers, from whom he said Telangana, more specifically Hyderabad, has a threat. “BRS gave them shelter, and they are being nurtured by Congress,” he alleged, speaking with the media persons in Hyderabad on Friday, August 15. “Gujaratis are not coming here to loot you, or seek power. They are only coming to do business. They are adding to Telangana’s GDP,” he said, adding that anybody could live anywhere in the country.

Minorities stopping growth of BCs: Bandi Sanjay

Claiming that the minorities were taking away livelihoods of the Backward Classes (BC) like Are Katikas and Rajakas, he dared those ones talking about Marwaris, to talk about those (minorities) who are stopping the growth of BC communities.

“We will do a movement to protect Hindu growth,” he said. He asked the people to just ignore the ‘Marwari go back, Gujarati go back movement,’ and cautioned that it was all a conspiracy to break the unity of Hindus, who he felt, were coming together as a vote-bank.

BANGLADESH LOOKS TO MALAYSIA'S INFLUENCE TO ADDRESS ROHINGYA CRISIS - YUNUS

Bangladesh is seeking Malaysia's influence, particularly its role as ASEAN Chair, to rally international efforts to address the prolonged Rohingya refugee crisis in the country.

Chief Adviser to Bangladesh's government Prof Dr Muhammad Yunus said Malaysia's experience in hosting Rohingya refugees coupled with its leadership position in ASEAN places it in a unique position to push for a comprehensive regional solution.

"We are hoping that Malaysia will put its influence in the whole negotiation to make sure that we can overcome this problem," he told the Malaysian National News

Agency (Bernama) in a special interview before concluding his official visit to Malaysia.

The interview with the 2006 Nobel Prize laureate was led by Editor-in-Chief Arul Rajoo Durar Raj, Editor of International News Service Voon Miaw Ping, and Assistant Editor of Economic News Service Kisho Kumari Sucedaram.

Yunus also warned that the refugee crisis has deepened amid ongoing fighting in Myanmar's Rakhine state between the Arakan Army and government forces, forcing fresh waves of Rohingyas fleeing across the border into Bangladesh.

In the last 18 months alone, 150,000 new Rohingyas have arrived, in addition to the 1.2 million already in Bangladesh.

"It becomes more and more acute. And worst of it, the US cut off all the funds to maintain them. So that is a huge problem for us," he said.

The Chief Adviser said three international conferences on the Rohingya will be convened in the coming months to seek a sustainable solution.

The first is scheduled in Cox's Bazar at the end of this month, coinciding with the eighth anniversary of Bangladesh assuming responsibility for hosting Rohingya refugees fleeing hostilities in their home state.

The second high-level meeting will take place on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly in September, while the third is planned for year-end in Doha, Qatar.

Repatriation efforts have made little progress, further complicated by the ongoing armed conflict in Myanmar since 2021.
